sional opinion of what is required (Tondora et al. 2014). A collaborative care plan is a document and a process that involves nurses and consumers working together to identify individual goals and strategies for recovery. The systematic use of collaborative care plans provides one opportunity for nurses to engage therapeutically and enact the relational components of collaboration towards a essary (Tondora et al. 2012). Interestingly, this belief per-sists even when their practice objectively does not resemble PCCP, signaling that providers are unable to identify when PCCP is either present or absent in clinical practice. As a result, providers may feel less motivated to engage in activi-ties that may improve their PCC- and PCCP-related skills, thereby undermining the effective
